PREFACE

AFTER the principal lines in the Starkey and Lawrence families were outlined in a previous monograph the study was continued and many errors were corrected by comparison with town books, family letters, and other data. That led to the study of other maternal lines which were traced upward to earliest members, so developing some immigrant ancestors who had been amongst the first to take an active part in organizing and framing the first colonial laws; others had been pioneers in founding a settlement on the Bay Path, braving the depths of the virgin forests that lined western Massachusetts, erecting garrisons, and fighting the Indians who, desperate, strove to retain their inherited hunting grounds; others, still, plodded away from the almost monotonous plains of Bristol County to unite with a small band of their intimates and neighbors in toiling up the heights that fenced southern New Hampshire to create homes among the rugged hill slopes and valleys.

From Troy, one of the sightliest of these hill towns in Cheshire County, Clarissa Lawrence Starkey, upon her marriage with Thomas Crane, was led down to the riverside city of New York for her first home making. With him, she aided in forming and perfecting their fine estate on Long Island Sound, converting "Rock Acre" into one of the beautiful places which lie in the quiet town of Stamford, Connecticut.

After many long years of fruitful life, during which she journeyed through the other states, upon the decease of her husband, Mrs. Crane, with her two surviving sons, caused to be planned and erected in her husband's native city of Quincy, Massachusetts, one of Richardson's artistic libraries, which is surrounded by a slope of richest greensward.

As a misunderstanding was suggested in data herein recorded, we would add that since the year began on March 15, then, on March 25, until 1752, that made February the twelfth month, or the last of the year.

ADDRESS

AT THE FUNERAL OF MRS. THOMAS CRANE

ONE of our most loved and revered poets describes himself in old age as standing beside a massive gateway built up in the years gone by, upon whose top the clouds lie in eternal shadows. While the evening sunshine streams on quiet wood and lea, he stands and calmly waits "till the hinges turn for him." During his long life he has seen the gateway afar off and known that each day he was coming nearer to it. But now he has approached its threshold and waits for the divine call to pass over. While he waits he sees the aged, with tasks all done and weary step, go through the open portals. Youth with life's joys unfathomed, its victories unwon, disappear in the cloud, and sometimes the little feet of infants mark the dust along the way. At last, he also was missed in the accustomed places. He had joined the great throng moving to God and had passed within the open gates to the glory of the eternal home.

There is much in the experience of Bryant's last days that reminds us of the life of our honored friend whose loss we mourn to-day. She whose body lies before us in quiet beauty lived fourscore years and more. Many years ago her husband, to whom she was bound by strong cords of affection, was taken from her by death. One by one her children have passed away until but a single son of a numerous family remains to do her honor. There is something pathetic in old age. Its loneliness is so great. The companions of early days pass away until all the old associations are broken and the whole face of the world seems altered. The majority is in heaven, old faces are no longer seen, the touch of a familiar hand is missed, and the silence of the chamber and the street is oppressive. Such must have been the last years to our friend. She waited so long at the shadowed gateway that the summons to enter was a glad one. While, therefore, we come here to-day with a keen sense of personal grief and loss, there is, also, in our hearts a feeling of solemn joy that after so long and useful a life, old age has changed to eternal youth and loneliness to heavenly companionship.

Before we place in tender mother earth all that is mortal, it seems fitting to review simply and briefly a career that has been marked by unusual strength and worth. Undue exaggerated praise would be as distasteful to her who is gone as it is to every modest and unobtrusive nature. But when a character has been wrought out in our midst which embodies so much of womanly grace and Christian faith, it becomes our duty to apply the lessons it teaches to our own lives for our comfort and inspiration.

Mrs. Thomas Crane will always be specially remembered and honored in her home life. As wife, mother, and friend, she was known for her strength of mind, keenness of judgment, and absolute faithfulness. Who can measure the force of the domestic affections and service? It seems almost sacrilegious to speak of the love and constancy of the wife, the tenderness and patience of the mother. Through the long years the husband and wife grew closer and closer to one another until the two lives became one. Her children rose up to call her blessed and her friends rejoiced in her helpful spirit. In all the qualities of life that add strength and beauty to the home, that nourish high ideals in the young, and that bring hope and faith to the world, this woman excelled. In addition to her wisdom of judgment and rare executive ability, she always exhibited a cheerful spirit. One could never meet her without being touched and brightened by her sunny manner and hopeful word. Those who knew her in the sacred relations of the home will always tenderly cherish her memory.

In addition to her work in private life, she touched public life at many points. She believed in the higher education and broader training of women. She wished to increase the self-reliance and opportunities of her sex. For this reason, as well as the result of her intellectual interests, she associated herself with Sorosis, the first woman's club formed for mutual improvement, an organization that has made a very real contribution to the higher life of the community. She took the wider outlook and believed in and aided the advance made by woman in recent years in intellectual and social life. But nothing appealed to her generous nature with more force than the philanthropic institutions which have been established for the education of the people and the amelioration of the suffering poor. She was never happy unless she was adding to the joy of living. Societies for the prevention of cruelty to children, for giving sight to the blind, for making the lame walk, for the treatment of chronic invalids, in a word, all the complex charities of our modern civilization, interested her and many received substantial aid from her generous gifts. "Freely she had received, freely she gave." But it is probable that no benevolent work commanded more undivided love and service than that of the Chapin Home for the Aged and Infirm. This was due partly to the fact that this Home is the memorial to one of the most eloquent preachers and noblest men the world has known, but more because it gave a refuge to those who, in the time of old age and after lives of active labor, found themselves alone in the world, without the means of support and the ministrations of relatives and friends. The loneliness of these aged people and their need of recognition and considerate care seemed to appeal to her with more force as her own years increased and she was left more and more alone. For a long time she was an officer in the Home and one of its most active and generous supporters. How many times we have seen her on public occasions, her face all aglow with the interests she felt in this beneficent institution, moving about from one room to another, extending her hand in welcome and good cheer to the aged inmates.

It would be impossible to recount her public and private charities and measure the happiness she has given. As the weakness of old age increased, one of her chief regrets was that she could no longer give her personal attention to these great works.

The inspiration and crown of our friend's life were found in her religious faith. She was eminently a religious woman. Christian ideals to her afforded the highest and happiest ends of life. She believed in God as the Universal Father, in the universal brotherhood of man, and the final triumph of good over evil. In a word, she was a Universalist. But she accepted this faith, not late in life when it became popular, but in the early days when a Universalist was looked upon with contempt. With her husband, in this church during the ministry of its former great preacher, she was one of the most devout worshipers and active workers, by her constant presence encouraging and her generous gifts aiding every worthy enterprise. To her, religion was not simply the profession of a creed but the embodiment of that creed in life. The supreme test of Christian discipleship was announced by Christ when he said, "Inasmuch as ye have done the humblest deeds of kindness to the least of my brethren ye have done them unto me." Those who render such service, such, he declares, are accepted in my kingdom. Practical religion always commanded the admiration and obedience of this true woman. The faithful wife, the unselfish mother, the loyal friend, the generous benefactor, the humble and hopeful Christian disciple has gone. We cannot ask that she should be given back to us. The time has come when death is a blessed consummation. When pain makes way for peace, loneliness for glad reunion, life for immortality, can we do otherwise than say, "It is best that our beloved friend should go"? In spite, then, of the grief, there is a holy joy in our hearts. We will remember all the strength and nobility of our friend's life and seek to imitate her qualities of mind and heart. She has gone from darkness to light, from lower to higher knowledge, from imperfection toward perfection. She loves us still and, by spiritual means which we do not altogether understand, may uplift and bless us. Let us be grateful for so long and true a life and wait in faith that day when we, also, shall pass through the gates into "the Father's house of many mansions."

THE STARKEY LINES

THIS surname sprang from the words “stark—starkey (stark-naked), meaning stripped for battle, made strong as David was when he threw off his armor. When men did so, they were called by the Saxons ‘bold.’” (Family Names, by Harry Alfred Long.)

“This name is principally represented in the Burnly district of Lancashire, whose families have not wandered far from their ancient home.” (Our English Surnames, by C. W. Bardsley, p. 411.)

“Our Starks and Starkie represent a word which can hardly be said to exist in our vocabulary; a forcible word, it once expressed the rude untutored nature of anything (stark).”

“Starkie, Old English ‘stout,’ ‘strong,’ ‘unyielding’; in the French it is ‘Staquet’; in the Dutch, ‘Stark,’ ‘Starck.’”

“This surname, signifying strength (stark), is one of great antiquity in the English counties

of Lancashire and Cheshire. In the form of Starkie it was held in Cheshire as early as the time of Geoffery Starkie of Barenton in 1343, its families growing more numerous under the reign of Henry VII. As Starkey, it was at Huntroyd and Aughton in 1567 and onwards, each family carrying as a crest a stork." (Local Gleanings in Lancashire and Cheshire, v. 2, p. 582.)

In the Massachusetts Bay Colony, in the early years, there were several persons bearing this cognomen. There was one Captain William Starkey in Lynn in 1641. A Robert Starkey was resident of Concord, whose inventory was taken at Boston, 28, 8, 1646, by Captain Willard, Joseph Wheeler, and Richard Lettin, but this Robert Starkey does not appear to have had any connections in Concord at that time.

Then there was George Starkey or Starkie, of whom Savage says he may have been of Lynn or Malden. He was of Harvard College in 1646. All that is known of him was his experience in London, where he sent his servant at the time of the Great Plague, "having made himself acquainted with medicine," as is related in the letters of Allen, "for the credit of Harvard College (new born), at Cambridge, New England.

The metropolis of his native land was indebted in its most dismal visitation to a graduate of its second year (Allen, 1643), and to another of its fifth year, of bestowing such honours when the time-honoured university so many thousand miles nearer perhaps gave far less of educated skill to her relief." (Sibley's Harvard Graduates, v. 1, pp. 136-7.)

Then there was one Robert Starkey, a mariner of Boston, whose house stood on land owned by Rev. Increase Mather and adjacent to the minister's own house. He was a member of the Scots' Charitable Society, the earliest ever framed at Boston, which was gathered to aid the unfortunate prisoners taken at the battle of Dunbar and sent over to be sold for a stated length of time, whom the society voted to meet as soon as they should land, to give what succor they might need. Robert Starkey's will was drawn in 1705, and his only son, Robert, junior, succeeded his father, who was himself a printer and publisher on Fleet Street, Boston. With this son, the name became extinct in the male line.

Then there was the man with whose history and descendants we are chiefly concerned, John Starkey, the immigrant ancestor. One of the descendants of the present day states that in his family the name was always written Starkie; still another descendant says his family tradition was that one of their ancestors came from Standish, Lancashire, England, which was a region of weavers, and, though this connection has yet to be established, it is rendered very likely, as this first John Starkey ranked himself as a weaver in his early land transactions, and there "have been a large number of families in Lancashire who have, for generations, carried the given names of John, Thomas, William, and George." (English Surnames, p. 411, et sup.)

The first record of John<sup>1</sup> Starkey on Boston books was when his son, John,<sup>2</sup> was born in 1667. In accord with one of the very earliest-framed laws of the Colony, every proposed settler must sign as a member of the church and possess a certain fixed sum of money for a capital before he could be allowed to hold any civic office or have his children baptized, an indispensable rite at that period. As all the children who were carried to the First Church at Boston were baptized as children "of Sister Starkey" (also written Starkie), it shows that the father had not yet even signed the "Half-Way Covenant" that had been framed to pave the way for those who would not make themselves full members.

He first bought a small house at the north end of Boston, where he established his weaving frames. Soon after the birth of the fifth child entered on Boston records, "John Starkey was cited by Thomas Lynde, constable at Mystic Side, Charlestown, to appear with others to take the Freeman's oath in 2d, 10th, 1674. These persons then appeared at Court (in Malden) and were sworn in 15, 10, 1674." (Massachusetts Bay Colony.)

April 8, 1674, John Starkey, with his wife, Mrs. Sarah Starkey, signing her dower rights, took a mortgage deed from Samuel Brackenbury, "phisitian," for land at Malden. From the first he seemed fully beset with the fever for accumulation of land that fired the ambition of all our early colonial fathers, as, on May 27, 1674, together with twenty-nine of the inhabitants of Malden, he signed a petition sent to the Great and General Court of the Massachusetts Bay Colony for a new grant of land in a plantation at Quinsigamond (now Worcester). As this petition was granted, he seemed ready to take advantage of it and actually began to work upon it; but even if he did go to the plantation, he must have returned to Malden, as, on October 11, 1675, Samuel Brackenbury, physician, for sixty pounds, sold to John Starkey, weaver, one half of a house, a barn that stood on land owned by the children of Mary Ridgeway in Malden, together with a passageway, garden, orchard, pasture, plow land; in all, seven acres of land, with two acres of salt marsh. (Middlesex County Deeds, v. 6, p. 124.)

In that deed John Ridgeway gave his residence as at Pemaquid, Maine. November 11, 1676, John Ridgeway, senior, with his son, John Ridgeway, junior, of Mystic Side, Malden, in consideration of a new frame for a house, with six pounds in money, sold to John Starkey, clothier, of Malden, one half of a barn and two acres of land. November 26, 1677, Elizabeth Hayden sold a lot of land in Charlestown, on the Mystic Side, near Malden, by the Penny Ferry, to John Starkey.

October 2, 1678, Elizabeth Dickerman, servant to John Starkey, appeared before the General Court, where she was "convicted of setting her master's house afire and meditated and contrived to put copperas into ye victuals of her fellow servants."

The last deed given by John Starkey while yet

THE STARKEY LINES

at Malden was dated 17, 10, 1679, when he purchased three acres of land from Robert Cawley; he acknowledged this deed in 1682. Soon after that date he appeared at one of the seacoast towns of Maine, to which his attention was undoubtedly attracted by his connection with the Ridgeways. The elder Ridgeway, following his profession as a seaman and fisherman, frequently voyaged to Pemaquid and New Harbour and must have attracted John Starkey by his report of the great value of the fisheries and immense tracts of lumber. After this follows the next item of consequence: "To his Excellency, Edmond Andros, John Starkey's pettcon Whereas ye Pettconer being an inhabitant of New Harbour and having a patent for a tract of land—and the conveniency of meadow or marsh where it might be found convenient your Excellency's Pettconer being much straightened for room for his cattle was first to look out where he could find any marsh that was not taken up nor laid down to any person—and he found two small parcels, ye one lying and being at a place called Pancake Hill, about six acres, ye other at Coxes his meadow about six acres, more or less, the marsh—by the Petconers request to Captain Amos Andros was granted yt it should be laid out—by a surveyor your Excellencys Pettconer therefore humbly prays that his marsh may be laid out by some surveyor of your Excellencys appointment.” (Court Records, vol. 123, p. 210, undated.)

On May 11, 1689, eight of the inhabitants of Pemaquid, Maine, sent a petition to the General Court of Massachusetts Bay, under whose jurisdiction the whole province of Maine was then held, that Lieutenant James Weems might be left in command of the Fort standing at Pemaquid Point. These were Jhn. —, Dennis —, Elihu Gunnison, Alx. Woodrop, George Jackson, John Bullock, Jonas Bogardus, John Starkey.

The bay-indented coast of Maine was a resort for British ships as early as 1605, and about this time Captain George Weymouth, in command of the English ship, the “Archangel,” anchored at this port, where he was cordially welcomed and well treated by the Indian owners. When he again sailed he carried off five of the savages. This outrage roused a strong feeling against him and gave birth to a spirit of resentment which was to bear horrible results thereafter.

The peninsula of Pemaquid Point embraces two out of three of the natural divisions of the town of Bristol, which is bounded on the north by the town of Damariscotta, on the east and south by Broad Bay Sound, John's Bay and River, and the Atlantic Ocean, on the west by the Damariscotta River. The lower section of this place is divided into three parts, consisting of high ridges of land lying between John's River on the west and Pemaquid River on the east. On the outer harbor to the eastward lies the village of Pemaquid, west of which, then a mere footpath running through dense woods, is a road connecting it with the town of New Harbour, lying almost at the mouth of the Penobscot River by the Island of Monhegan, most conveniently situated for promoting the then most important traffic of the province of Maine, its fisheries and cutting of lumber. Near Pemaquid Point a fort was early erected for the safety of its few scattered settlers, called Shurt's Fort. This was in good condition from 1642 until 1676; then, it having fallen into ruins, Fort Charles was built under the jurisdiction of Sir Edmund Andros, then governor.

Up to August, 1689, there had been no open warfare between the French and English, but then Baron Castine, whose residence at Castine, Maine, had been sacked by Andros' order, in revenge for this secretly stirred the Indians against the settlers. As a result of his machinations a band of the Penobscot Indians, headed by the sachem, Moxos, landed at New Harbour, on the opposite side from the Fort, from which they were concealed by the heavy forests that covered all the land about, pierced only by foot-paths. Just at this time "one Starkey, an Englishman, made his way from the Fort to New Harbour." The stealthy Indians, in a band of one hundred men, Moxos at the head, surprised Starkey and captured him, promising to set him at liberty if he would reveal the condition of affairs at the Fort. A helpless captive, one against a hundred, he could do naught but say what they demanded, and they then learned that there were but few men in the Fort. There "were no scouts out; Mr. Giles, with fourteen men, had gone to his farm at some distance and the rest were scattered abroad on their occasions." Upon this information the savages divided their number; one part made their secret way up the Falls, fell upon and killed Mr. Giles and his companions; the other band crept through the woods and climbed the rocks which overhung the Fort. No one was on guard, as they flung themselves down and "grievously

galed the defendants." Captain Weems, in command, had his face horribly scorched at the very beginning of the assault, by an accidental discharge of gunpowder. "Captain Skynner and Captain Farnham, as they were going towards the Fort from an island about half a mile distant, were attacked and slain, as was Captain Robert Pattishall, who owned and commanded a sloop which voyaged between Boston and the Maine coast. Night descending, the assault halted only to be renewed with fresh fury as day dawned. After a desperate resistance, over-powered by superior numbers, Captain Weems proposed terms of capitulation. These included the safety of all those in the Fort, as what few settlers had been aroused by the attack had taken refuge in the garrison, together with three English captains who were lately escaped from the Indians." The captains came out with fourteen men, some women and children, all with packs on their backs, as they were allowed to take with them what they could carry in their hands, and to depart in Captain Pateshall's sloop, which had also been seized by the savages. These persons sailed for Boston, but all the people of the village who were outside of the Fort at this time were forced to go with the Indians up the Penobscot, some in canoes, the others in two other sloops which had been seized, "these last bands numbering about fifty persons." (Mather's Magnalia, vol. 2, pp. 590 et seq.)

Mather makes the time of this attack to have been on August 2, 1689, but Captain Weems says in his petition to Lord Bellamont for the back pay of his soldiers, that the surrender was on August 13, 1689, and reckoned the pay up to that date. This petition was presented by Captain Weems several years later, and at a time when he was residing in New York and sent repeated petitions for the delayed payment for himself and his men for their services in the Fort.

What John Starkey's fate was has never been revealed. Not a single fact has as yet rewarded a long and exhaustive search in all attainable archives, but it seems obvious that he must have been slain, either at the time he was surrounded by the Penobscots or during the attack at the Fort. Whether all his family were at the Fort or still in their home, whether his wife and six children were among those who were permitted to carry away their few effects to the sloop, or whether one or more of the children had been left with friends in Malden while the parents were founding the new home in the wilds of Maine is hidden from our knowledge, but, since Tryall Newbury as attorney in Malden, in behalf of the heirs of John Starkey, claimed one hundred and four acres of land lying within the bounds of Jamestown, on Pemaquid Neck, beginning at a certain run north of Richard Murren's house, together with twenty acres of meadow, as was shown by John Starkey's patent under Governor Dungan of New York to Richard Murren, which patent was dated September 3, 1686, we are assured that more than one of John Starkey's family escaped or was safely housed in Malden at this disastrous time. This land was claimed by Tryall Newbury as "butted in part by land owned by William Case." In the records of Charlestown, Massachusetts, is the marriage of William Case, January 28, 1685/6, to Mary Starkey; but this time was too early for this Mary to have been a daughter of John Starkey, as his own daughter, Mary, was baptized April 1, 1671, but the latter Mary may have been a sister of John, as this record of William Case living at Pemaquid suggests, and they may have been incited to follow their brother to Maine.

The next link in this history was found in a deed which is on record at Bristol County, Massachusetts, wherein Andrew<sup>2</sup> Starkey of Attleboro', Bristol County, on December 19, 1716, sold to James White of Attleboro' "all the lands lying at Pemaquid, Maine, adjoining a place called New Harbour, in the eastwards parts of New England, one hundred and four acres of land, with twenty acres of meadow land, lately belonging to my honoured father, John<sup>1</sup> Starkey, deceased." Since this Andrew Starkey claims in his own right alone the acres which we have seen were held by his father, he, the youngest of the family, claiming as his sole right, without reference to any other heirs, and without any assignment of rights which would naturally be entered were the eldest son, John,<sup>2</sup> or any other child yet living, it seems to prove that all the others had died. As this youngest child must have been an infant when the family started to make a new home in the wilderness, it is most likely that he was confided to the care of some Malden friends, where he grew to man's estate and where he appears to have resided for some time before his marriage, as well as afterwards.

Other deeds prove that he thought of settling in eastern Connecticut a short while before his final arrangement in Attleboro'. This town was set off as Rehoboth North Purchase, having been bought by Captain Thomas Willett of Plymouth, Massachusetts, from the Indian sachem, Wamsutta, of Pokonaokett, on April 8, 1661. That tract embraced what now is Rehoboth, Cumberland, a tract of land a mile and a half square extending east and west, which was, later, annexed to Rehoboth as an enlargement of that town, with a part of Mansfield and Norton; the part which was first added to Rehoboth was joined to Attleboro'.

The present town of Attleboro' is a rather low-lying, flat district, with a few small hills across the horizon line. From its very beginning it has been given over to manufactures and is now the center for cutlery and jewelers' works. Its pioneer settler was John Woodcock, who had previously joined the Springfield (Mass.) colony. The country between these two places was one vast, unbroken forest. Together with his stalwart sons he hewed his toilsome way through the woods and set at work to clear some three hundred acres for his homestead farm, with the Bay Path in its midst, then just a way that had been trampled down by the Indians as they wandered down to Connecticut, soon followed by the "newcomers" as the easiest and most direct path as they went from Watertown and Cambridge to create new towns "below the line."

With the aid of his sons, John Woodcock erected a strong and substantial garrison house, hewing out the timbers from the mighty trees that grew all about the place, and planned it so largely that it served not only for his own and his sons' families, but also as a tavern, the only shelter offered to wayfarers between Springfield on the one side and Hartford on the other, as a place for religious worship and as a fortification and a refuge for other settlers during the constant raids. "Woodcock's Garrison was a well-known place for rendezvous during the Indian wars and was one of a chain of fortifications extending from Boston to Rhode Island." On July 5, 1670, the General Court at Plymouth, Massachusetts, in which county Rehoboth was first enrolled, in reply to a petition from John Woodcock "allowed him to keep an ordinary at Ten Mile river." This was the first public house on the Bay Path and was kept as such from 1670 until 1833. When it was finally torn down its mighty timbers were found to be just as sound as when they were rough hewn from the monarchs of the adjacent wild woods.

In May, 1676, the Indians fell upon Wrentham, near Boston, slaughtering, pillaging, and burning as they rioted onwards. Laying waste the places, they made their revengeful way across country, until they reached the thickets near Rehoboth, creeping stealthily through until they spied some of the sons of John Woodcock working in the fields. Rushing upon them, the Indians killed one, wounded another, and set fire to the house of one of the sons. The workmen fled to the garrison, leaving the dead and wounded on the field. To gratify a spite held against the family, the savages cut off the head of one of the sons and stuck it up on a stick on a hill, full in view of the garrison. His enraged father buried the body just where he fell and dedicated that ground to future burial purposes, vowing to take terrible vengeance on his merciless foes.

“Numerous were the encounters that father had with the Indians and many were the wounds he himself received, since his dead body revealed incontestable proof in the scars of seven bullet holes. So inveterate did his hate become and so terribly was his anger stirred against his son’s slayers that the white man’s law of the land had to be resorted to for the protection of the red heathen against the even more savage practice of the white Christian. The Court records that John Woodcock of Rehoboth, for going into an Indian house and taking away an Indian child and some of his goods in lieu of payment for a debt owed by this Indian, was sentenced to sit in the stocks at Rehoboth on a training day and to pay a fine of forty shillings.” (General Pierce in History of Bristol County, pp. 20, 21.

So runs the story of one of the earliest ancestors in the Starkey line. Despite his fierce and warlike spirit, John Woodcock lived to advanced years and died quietly in his bed on October 20, 1701.

THE STARKEY LINES

Some twelve years after the decease of John Woodcock, his son-in-law, Andrew<sup>2</sup> Starkey, was recorded as at Hebron, New London County, Connecticut. How long he remained there the records do not show, but it was there that, in 1713, he registered a deed of a purchase of fifty-six acres of land at the North Purchase of Rehoboth, Bristol County, Massachusetts, from John Goth of Attleboro'. From that time Andrew<sup>2</sup> Starkey always signed his residence as of Attleboro'. In 1714 he added five more acres to his holdings. In 1715 his wife, Mrs. Mehitable Starkey, signing away her dower right, he made over to Alexander Balcom a lot of land which the said Alexander had previously received from Joseph Hopkins of Providence, Rhode Island. Another purchase of land was made in 1724. In 1726 he paid one hundred and sixty pounds for a house and lands. April 19, 1740, he, signing as a cordwainer, bought sixty-three acres of land at Norton, for which he paid two hundred and twenty-two pounds, thus adding largely to his landed possessions as the years passed over his head.

The inventory of his estate was rendered October 24, 1740, by his widow, Mrs. Mehitable Starkey, and his son, Nathaniel.<sup>3</sup> Among other effects were books to the value of thirteen pounds, a sawmill, a grist mill, a house with sixty-three acres of land at Norton, another house with two hundred and ten acres of land at Attleboro' and estate at Wrentham, and other items were nineteen pairs of gloves. The whole inventory amounted to nineteen hundred pounds, seven shillings, and twopence, a large return for those days.

ANDREW<sup>2</sup> STARKEY married at Malden (1) in 1708 Mehitable, daughter of Samuel and Mehitable (Buckname) Waite. She was born at Malden, December 22, 1686; died at Attleboro' in 1717. He married (2) at Attleboro', February 2, 1717, Katherine, daughter of Alexander and Sarah (Woodcock) Balcom. She was born at Attleboro', February 7, 1694; he died there in 1740.

Thomas<sup>3</sup> Starkey, with his son, Thomas,<sup>4</sup> gave a deed to Moses Starkey, housewright, of Winslow, Maine, of a right to a certain dwelling house which had lately been built by the son Thomas. On the same date, Thomas,<sup>3</sup> the father, made a deed of gift to his son, Moses<sup>4</sup> Starkey, of one half of his own holdings, reserving "the great room in their dwelling for the use of his wife, his son, Moses, to take one entire half of all the estate if he would bind himself to give them (his parents) one half of all the produce of all kinds, pay one half of all taxes, keep the stock at equal rates, care for his parents during the remainder of their natural lives, and not make strief nor stirr, he to begin the bargain on the next April, 1795." As this involved the son's leaving his settlement at Winslow, or Vassalboro', where he was engaged in his trade as a housewright, the contract became void. The father rescinded his proposition and went on in the management of his farm. (Bristol County Deeds, vols. 67, 73, pp. 427, 109.)

Thomas<sup>3</sup> Starkey published his marriage intention August 30, 1755, to Rebecca, daughter of Jonathan and Rebecca (Morse) Capron. She was born at Attleboro', February 1, 1734.

JOHN<sup>4</sup> STARKEY, son of John<sup>3</sup> (Andrew,<sup>2</sup> John<sup>1</sup>) and Amy (Capron) Starkey, was born March 13, 1745/6. He was among the earliest of the pioneers from Attleboro' whose thoughts had been turned to the new lands offered in the tracts lying in the John Mason grants in New Hampshire, its southern part in the district bordering "the grand Monadnock mountain," at this period one vast stretch of unbroken forests dominated by the bald crown of Monadnock, from the rocky summit of which, rising over three thousand feet above sea level, there was an extensive view of swelling hills, falling to the river, with their lofty tree tops sheltering the plains below. Lured by the promise of such productive farm lands as they had seen lying along the Connecticut River banks, several families broke up their little homes and started for the region, struggling up the heights, through the dense woods, finding slopes rugged and barren, strewn with ledges of granite, many of which are, even up to this day, still lying in their original condition, yet untouched by plow or ax.

September 25, 1777, John<sup>4</sup> Starkey, registering as of Swanzey, New Hampshire, sold to his brother, Joseph<sup>4</sup> Starkey, lot No. 27, in the first range, in that part of the township formerly called Richmond, said land bounded in part by lots belonging to Enoch Starkey and John Follett. June 27, 1778, John<sup>4</sup> Starkey sold land in Swanzey to John Follett, which was bounded in part by Joseph<sup>4</sup> Starkey's land. June 3, 1779, he sold to his brother, Enoch<sup>4</sup> Starkey, lot No. 26, in the first range in Swanzey, lying by John Follett's possessions and those of John Starkey, junior, and Joseph Starkey. In 1782 he sold one hundred and fifty acres of land in Swanzey to Abraham Randall of Richmond.

ter of John and Rebecca (Sweetland) Godding. She was born at Attleboro', August 15, 1752. Soon after her father's death her mother, with her children, joined the pioneers at Richmond. John<sup>4</sup> Starkey died childless, and she married (2) Jacob Newell from Attleboro'.

ENOCH<sup>4</sup> STARKEY, son of John<sup>3</sup> (Andrew<sup>2</sup> John<sup>1</sup>) and Amy (Capron) Starkey, was born at Attleboro', June 29, 1748. Early in 1776, with his brothers, he was one of the little band who labored through the dangers and difficulties of the rough country to begin the foundation of the young settlement. As they wound their toilsome way, they sought the easiest, least elevated paths, thereby laying out a route that curved about the base of the hills and wound about their valleys, and so formed a series of as picturesque drives as can be found in the finest New Hampshire places.

THE STARKEY LINES

On February 23, 1782, he sold lots to his nephew, John<sup>5</sup> Starkey, junior, which were in the adjoining town of Swanzey. All the different parcels of land were so situated that they were, at different times, included in Troy, Richmond, or Swanzey, but his final registration was at Swanzey.

Before Enoch<sup>4</sup> Starkey started for his new home, he published his marriage intention at Attleboro', October 15, 1774, to Betsey (Elizabeth) Blackinton, daughter of George and Mary (Day) Blackinton, of the line of Pentecost Blackinton, from Marblehead, Mass. She was born at Attleboro', January 3, 1751; died at Swanzey, January 18, 1823. He died there June 18, 1821, and his estate was administered by his son, George<sup>5</sup> Starkey, June 4, 1824, and one of the legatees was his granddaughter, Clarissa<sup>6</sup> Starkey, then a girl of eleven years.

PETER<sup>4</sup> STARKEY, son of John<sup>3</sup> (Andrew,<sup>2</sup> John<sup>1</sup>) and Amy (Capron) Starkey, was born in Attleboro', at a date not recorded, but about the year 1745. He started for Cheshire County about 1776, just as the war of the Revolution was breaking out, and purchased a lot of land in that part of the township which was soon incorporated as the town of Troy, and built his house on West Hill, nearly at the foot of Mount Monadnock. (History of Swanzey, p. 452.)

"But he soon dropped the axe and was drafted into the army just before the battle of Bennington, and is said to have taken an active part in that sanguinary conflict; soon after he obtained his discharge and returned to his home." (History of Troy, p. 474.)

He served as a private in Captain Samuel Wright's Company, General John Stark's Brigade, which marched from Winchester, New Hampshire, to join the Northern Army.

Before he left Attleboro' he married Lona Grosvenor, who was probably from Pomfret, Connecticut, to which town her early ancestors went from Roxbury, Massachusetts, and were among the very earliest proprietors of that picturesque region. The Grosvenor family is one of distinction in England, claiming from the Earls of Grosvenor.

His land transactions began before 1785. On November 21, 1788, Peter<sup>4</sup> Starkey of Fitzwilliam sold for thirty-five pounds lot No. 20, in the twelfth range of lots in Fitzwilliam, of sixty acres, to William<sup>4</sup> Starkey of Attleboro'. March 11, 1789, he, then of Fitzwilliam, bought fifteen acres of land from Ichabod Shaw. In 1798 he sold a tract to his son, Otis<sup>5</sup> Starkey, and his sons Nathan<sup>5</sup> and Laban<sup>5</sup> were witnesses. In 1814 Peter<sup>4</sup> and his son Luna<sup>5</sup> set off the father's farm to Calvin<sup>5</sup> Starkey, bounded in part by land belonging to the widow of his son, Nathan<sup>5</sup> Starkey. MOSES<sup>4</sup> STARKEY, son of Thomas<sup>3</sup> (Andrew,<sup>2</sup> John<sup>1</sup>) and Rebecca (Capron) Starkey, was born at Attleboro', September 14, 1771. He was a house carpenter and first removed to Vassalboro', Maine, claiming his residence as at Winslow, Maine, when his father offered him an inducement to return to Attleboro' to take charge of the home farm and care for his parents. Although he, at first, appeared disposed to accept this proposal, he finally declined and remained at Winslow. Through the influence of a local movement he became a member of the Friends, or Quaker Society, and one of their ministers.

AMONG the planters who came to New England in the ships with Captain John Winthrop was Sir Richard Saltonstall, who brought with him heads of cattle for the new settlement in the wilderness. With him was Reverend John Phillips, a minister, and "fifteen other planters, Non-conformists, the larger part from London." With some other passengers, they at first attempted a settlement at Charlestown, but, "desiring to find a more abundant supply of water for their cattle," they sailed farther up along the Charles River some four miles and effected a landing, established themselves, and named the settlement Saltonstall's Plantation. To this the Great and General Court of Massachusetts Bay entered a protest and ordered the title to be changed to Watertown. The origin of the latter name is not clearly known, but the reasonable assumption seems to have been that this arose from the abundance of water, there being the Charles River on its border, with a large pond in its center.

The Dedham settlers, under Captain Roger Clapp, as they traveled up the river encountered a band of three hundred Indians, who kept at some distance from Clapp's party the first night they appeared, but on the following morning drew near and held out a large bass as a token of amity. To this Clapp responded cordially and "offered a biscuit cake," and it was owing to this exchange of kindness that the little colony was unmolested during the massacres of King Philip's war.

The earliest families of the Saltonstall settlement were placed near Mount Auburn; their lands extended down to the "fording place near tide water at the extreme easterly point of the proposed township." There these "staid, earnest men, of ample means and good social position," began laying out lots, the very first being grounds for the site of the first church, and so progressed that by 1635 nearly all the land was allotted for the homestalls, embracing the extensive tract at first named Watertown, but also the present towns of Waltham, Weston, a large part of Lincoln, and that part of Cambridge lying between Fresh Pond and the Charles, at first called the Middle Precinct or the Precinct of Captain Garfield and the West Precinct of Watertown.

THE LAWRENCE LINES

It was their boast that they were the very first of the new colonies to proclaim the law of representation, as, on February 3, 1631/2, the General Court of the Bay ordered a tax of sixty pounds to be raised out of the several plantations to defray the expense of building a palisade about New Towne (Cambridge). But the people of Watertown, when called upon for a contribution of eight pounds, assembled under the leadership of Rev. George Phillips and Elder Richard Brown and voted that it would be unwise to pay money after that sort for fear of its bringing themselves and their posterity under bondage.

In 1631 John Lawrence was among the earliest settlers coming from Wisset, in England. With his family he removed to Groton, Massachusetts. The next man to bear this surname was George Lawrence, between whom and John Lawrence no relationship has ever appeared, and it is from this younger man that all of this name in Watertown, Waltham, and Weston descend. His will drawn at Watertown follows:—

chased from Nicholas Cady of Watertown a tract of land of which the deed of conveyance was signed September 11, 1668. This tract was held by their descendants up to a very recent time. Still farther west in the town, the Lawrences owned a part of the estate which was, at first, owned by Hopestill Mead, and some of this homestead was, later, incorporated in the present town of Waltham.

As George<sup>2</sup> Lawrence, junior, he petitioned for abatement of his town rates in 1692; was chosen hog reave in March 24, 1695/6. As this office was, as a joke, given to the newly-married men, this seems to note the time of his marriage, which is not on record. He was chosen surveyor of the highways in 1701/2, after having served as a tithingman in 1698/9. May 25, 1710, the town agreed that if the children of his mother-in-law would not contribute to their mother's support, George Lawrence should receive compensation for what he expended in her behalf. In 1709/10, with John Dix, George and Mary Lawrence gave a deed of land lying in the near-by town of Cambridge.

He married —, Mary —. She died in Waltham, January 21, 1740/1. He died there March 9, 1735, in his sixty-seventh year.

DANIEL<sup>4</sup> LAWRENCE, son of William<sup>3</sup> (George,<sup>2</sup> George<sup>1</sup>) and Mary (Perry) Lawrence, was born in that part of Watertown which became the present town of Weston, Middlesex County, Massachusetts, September 29, 1747. About the year 1772, desiring to make a new home for himself in the lately-settled region of southern New Hampshire, he bought lot No. 5, in the tract of land lying in the fifth range of lots where the town of Marlboro' now stands. He began to hew away the heavy forests, clear the land, and build a log house, when there was a call to arms at the beginning of the Revolutionary War. Throwing down ax and plow, he hurried back to his native town, joined his kinsmen there at Weston, and first enlisted in Captain Samuel Lamson's Company, in the Weston Militia, on the alarm of April 19, 1775. Here he served three days, then received his discharge. He re-enlisted in Captain Nathaniel Fuller's Company, in Colonel William Bond's Regiment, when his name appears on a company's return dated at Camp Prospect Hill October 6, 1775. Receiving his discharge from this company, his name again occurs in Captain Asahel Wheeler's Company, in Colonel John Robinson's Regiment, on a roll dated March 4, 1776, where he served one month and twenty-eight days. He was one of the privates detached to fortify Bunker Hill and fought there under Colonel Prescott. Receiving an honorable discharge, he left the army and returned to Weston.

Daniel<sup>4</sup> Lawrence published his marriage intention at Weston, December 5, 1772, and was married there by the Rev. Samuel Woodward on April 22, 1772, to Betsey (Elizabeth) Greaves, daughter of James and Elizabeth (Smith)

Greaves. She was born at Sudbury, May 16, 1741. This same year they were admitted members of the First Church at Weston.

As soon as Daniel<sup>4</sup> Lawrence received his discharge from the army, he loaded his few household effects on an ox team and started on his toilsome way across Massachusetts, over the border to southern New Hampshire, to the lot on which he had begun the clearing in Marlboro'. After a successful, laborious life, he died there July 13, 1832. His widow, Betsey (Elizabeth), daughter of James and Elizabeth (Smith) Greaves, was on the Sudbury town record as having been born there May 16, 1741; the family gives the birth as in 1739. With her brother, Samuel, she received a legacy by the will of her uncle, Edward Smith of Natick, Massachusetts, in 1744. The next record of her early life is in the household of "Landlord Howe" at Sudbury Inn. Like all New England farmers' daughters, she was well trained in all the multifarious duties of the farm, where she was made capable, self-reliant, and whence she sought her independent way to take office at the inn.

This "Wayside Inn," as christened by Longfellow, was the fifth tavern built on the Boston road and was the last on that thoroughfare this side of Marlboro'. It was built by Daniel Howe, who, in 1702, received a grant of a farm of one hundred and thirty acres from his father, Samuel Howe, and on this lot he immediately began building, the workers seeking safety from the Indians at night by going to the Parmenter Garrison, a half mile distant. The stout timbers were cut from the adjacent forests and were stanchly laid to serve both as a home and as a garrison in time of need. It was spacious, sturdy, standing near Hop Brook, Nobscot Hill, and close by the main traveled road, having a warm, southerly exposure, its gables overshadowed by mighty trees, the eaves running east and west, and the trees casting their flecking shadows over its one hundred and eighty windows. The front door opened on a wide hall, with the bar on one side showing a high counter where mugs of flip and foaming cider were tossed down thirsty throats, leading into the broad, cheery kitchen, with its huge fireplace hung with brawny cranes, and tall wooden settles at its sides which served as cozy shelters to the storm-driven travelers. Here the dwellers of Nobscot and Peakham lounged away evening hours, the landlord of the times always being a man of note, skilled as a host, for all comers were his guests, ready of wit, meeting the weary men who lumbered down from the heavy stage, and with a hearty hand shake for the teamsters and men from the market side.

Nor were the several members of his staff behind him in cordiality. Among these stood Betsey Greaves, a slender girl of slight stature, a noticeably handsome face, and dark, bright eyes, who soon gave special heed to young Daniel Lawrence, who, with his wagon piled with produce from the thrifty farm or on his strong horse, tarried on his way to enjoy the cheer. The greetings grew more and more friendly, until they agreed that she would become a gladsome, blithe mistress for the home he would build.

Some of her kinsfolks were settled at Weston, whither she sped and where they were married, becoming members of the First Church, and where their two little daughters were born and one buried. Here she watched while he was away at the clearing, then during the agonies of the "fights" that drew the impetuous young father from his home making; coming unscathed, Daniel Lawrence seated this helpful young wife on his wain and they joined their labors in the wilderness. Despite her spare figure, her cheery spirit and vigorous mind carried her stoutly married Rose Clarke, July 22, 1624, and, with his family, came in the ship "Susan and Ellen," July, 1638, and settled at Mystic Side, Charlestown, now Malden, Massachusetts. He compiled and perfected the manuscript of the First Body of Laws of Massachusetts and was sent as deputy to the House of Deputies. His son-in-law, Captain John<sup>2</sup> Waite, "was allowed by the Colony a payment of four pounds, eighteen shillings, for his writing our books of the laws and for finding paper for both books." These were the first body of laws established in New England. After John<sup>2</sup> Waite was settled at Malden, he held important town offices; was elected town clerk, captain of the train band, commissioner to "end small causes," and succeeded his father-in-law as deputy to the House of Deputies, where he served during eighteen sessions. In 1678 he was at the head of the troops which marched to meet the regiments sent by Major Pyncheon from Springfield to Marlboro', with full instructions that, should an emergency arise, he was to take full control. In 1680 he was one of a committee to revise the laws. In 1681, together with the Deputy Governor, Israel Stoughton, and several others, he was chosen to prepare directions for the agents of the Colony who were to be sent to

THIS surname is supposed to have been derived from the town of Balcombe, Sussex County, England, in which the parish church was dedicated in 1299 and where the family of this name was on record before 1540. In 1661 Alexander Balcom was a tenant of a house at Portsmouth, Providence County, Rhode Island. July 14, 1686, he purchased a tract of land at Wesquadonsett, twelve miles north from Providence; November 13, 1702, he bought another lot of eighteen acres, and on April 20, 1703, still a third lot. His residence ther was in that part of Providence which was incorporated as Smithfield; there his will was drawn May 31, 1711, and was presented at Court by his son, John Balcom, November 20, 1712. In that he mentioned his wife, Mrs. Jane Balcom; his eldest son, Alexander; his daughters, Katherine Jenckes and Sarah Sheldon; his sons, John, Freegift, and Joseph; his daughter, Hannah; his

THIS family of shipwrights and mariners was early seated on the waterside of that parish of London which included Stepney and Limehouse Ratcliff. This parish of Stepney claims to have been held long before the Norman conquest, and was first known in the time of the Saxons as Stebenhurstheath ("heath" meaning a port or harbor); and the earliest mention of a rector of that parish was in 1233. In 1300 Stepney covered one large parish extending from the city to the river Lea and from the Thames to Hackney, and was, from that period, the center of shipbuilding. (Memorials of Stepney Parish, pp. III, XIII.)

In 1594 Thomas Greves was a parishioner of Lymehurst Hamlet. Henry<sup>1</sup> Greaves of Stepney died before 1590 and his widow, Mrs. Margaret Greaves, administered his estate July 8, 1590.

THE GREAVES—GRAVES LINES

His son, Thomas<sup>2</sup> Greaves of Limehouse, shipwright, drew his will April 20, 1603, and this was carried to Probate on June 20, 1603. In that he desired to be buried in Stepney church-yard; named his eldest daughter, Marie, then under twenty-one years of age; his daughter, Rebecca; his son, Matthew; his brother, John Greaves, and the children of this brother; his sister, Joan; Grace Lane, daughter of his sister, Marie Lane, deceased; his mother, Mrs. Margaret Masters; his sister, Hester Cocke; and his wife, Joane.

The will of his brother, John<sup>2</sup> Greaves of Limehouse, was drawn August 13, "13th. Charles (1637)," and was proved December 15, 1637, and ran as follows: "To be buried in the eastern end of Stepney Church yard on the south side of the church as near my first wife and children as conveniently may be; to wife Mary lease of the house now in tenure of Mr. Richard Elli, mariner, and in possession of John Shawe, mariner; to Anne Shawe and her heirs; after my wife's decease the Elli house to return to my son John Greaves who I had by her; to wife Mary the lease of my four new houses lately built held of lease of Mr. James and so much of the wharf as is now laid out and enclosed for the use of the

REAR ADMIRAL THOMAS<sup>3</sup> GREAVES was a son of John<sup>2</sup> (Henry<sup>1</sup>) and Sarah (Malter) Greaves and was baptized in Stepney parish of London, June 16, 1605. From the port of Wapping to a berth on shipboard was the almost invariable fate of all the lads of that region of sailors and mariners, and we soon find Thomas Greaves as mate on the ship "Talbot" in 1629; then a mate on one of the vessels which brought Governor John Winthrop and his followers to Massachusetts Bay in 1630. He was the first Master of the ship "Tryal," the first vessel built in Massachusetts, and continued to command her for many years, making voyages between the new colony and the English ports. One of these was reported by Thomas Aspinwall, a notary public of Boston, on October 14, 1645, when there was brought "in the Tryal, Mr. Greaves, Master a large and valuable cargo of wines, hatts, dry goods of various kinds, one pack containing fifty bibles, thirty unbound, two hundred bibles in twelve sheets, two hundred in pastboard one smale pack containing twenty bibles with notes," pins, needles, vinegar, linen, potashes, together with a heterogeneous array of the articles so vital to the uses of the young settlement.

He continued in command of the "Tryal" up to 1650 or so. May 30, 1652, Parliament appointed him a Captain of the frigate "President." In 1653 he was put in command of the "St. Andrew" with three hundred and sixty men, fifty-six guns. In an engagement with the Dutch, July 31, 1653, off the Suffolk coast in the British Channel, he was killed and his body was conveyed, the day after the engagement, to the nearest seacoast town of Aldeburgh and buried there. On October 28, 1653, Parliament ordered a grant of one thousand pounds to his widow and children, who were living in Charlestown, Massachusetts, with the exception of his son, John, who was at Ham. To this son was committed the care of the will in which he had been appointed as one of its executors; from there, the will was sent to New England to be recorded in the Middlesex County Probate Court, and is now held at East Cambridge, the county seat of that county. The Greaves coat of arms with the sign of difference, a martlet, was always used by his son, Dr. Thomas<sup>4</sup> Greaves. This will was as follows:—

“This my last will and testament is that I do bequeath vnto my beloved wife Katherine Greaves my now dwelling house, scituate in Charlestown in New England for the term of her life, and also the one third of all my goods, Shipping & moneys and plate. “This last will of Mr. Thomas Greaves being kept by himself sealed up and delivered to his brother Abraham Greaves and presented by his relick, widow before the Deputy Governour and the rest of the Magistrates and by them Allowed & Approved the first of the 11th month, 1653”

Rear Admiral Thomas<sup>3</sup> Greaves owned one sixteenth part of the ship “Increase,” three hundred and fifty-two acres of land at Woburn, Massachusetts, a house and one fifth of a house near Ham, England, and one half of a house “near Dickshore,” England.

Thomas<sup>3</sup> Greaves married at Charlestown, Middlesex County, Massachusetts, Katherine, daughter of Mrs. Katherine (Myles-Grey) Coytmore, and widow of Thomas Coytmore.

“An indenture between Catherine Coytmore, Increase Nowell of Charlestown wife Parnell, Thomas Greaves wife Katherine, mariner of Wapping, and Susannah Inglesfield, which Parnell, Katherine and Susannah are all daughters of Thomas Gray, of Harwich, County Essex, England, mariner to Robert Kidd, who held lands owned by Robert Myles of Sutton, County Suffolk, England, father of Katherine Grey

- V. NATHANIEL<sup>5</sup> GREAVES, born 14th, 2d, 1678. The following deed shows the fate of this son: "Nathaniel, son of Nathaniel and Elizabeth (Russell) Greaves, seaman, before going to sea, declared that his dear mother, Mrs. Elizabeth Harbor, should enjoy his part of the housing and garden in Charlestown, which was settled upon him by his father, and, at her death, it is to go to Elizabeth, only daughter of Robert and Katherine Knowles, said Katherine being the only child of the said Nathaniel Greaves."

JOSEPH<sup>4</sup> GREAVES, son of Rear Admiral Thomas<sup>3</sup> (John,<sup>2</sup> Henry<sup>1</sup>) and Katherine (Coytmore) Greaves, was born at Charlestown, but the record of his birth is not learned. On November 22, 1675, he was one of the proprietors in the new township of Sudbury, Middlesex County, Massachusetts. This place was largely owned by immigrants who came directly from England, while some proprietors in Watertown, an adjoining town, proposed establishing themselves there, as their own town was much straitened for room.

About 1633 the townsmen voted to grant Mr. Stearns of Charlestown, an ironmonger and blacksmith, certain meadow lands and fire wood for the use of his family, as well as wood and coal for his smithy work, he, also, to take the privilege of using timber from the Commons to build his house and shop, it being the wont of the early settlers to offer great inducements to blacksmiths to become one of their number.

A few years later Joseph<sup>4</sup> Greaves, a blacksmith from Charlestown, was offered the same privileges—timber for the purpose of house building and to erect a blacksmith's shop, with the land needful; he there established himself and his family. He was one of the men who offered to "travel with horse and weekly to fetch and carry preachers to supply Sudbury at least every Lord's day with ministers."

He married (1) at Sudbury, Massachusetts, January 15, 1661, Elizabeth, daughter of John and Mary (Axtell) Maynard. She died at Sudbury, June 5, 1676. He married (2) in 1678 Mary, daughter of James and Mary (Goodnow) Ross. She was born at Sudbury, December 25, 1656.

setts, February 1, 1707. In all his deeds he signs as a blacksmith, while his brother, Samuel,<sup>6</sup> gave his occupation as that of a trader. In 1743 Samuel<sup>6</sup> Greaves sold his ship timber to his brother Thomas.<sup>6</sup> In the same year Samuel gave a deed to his brother, James,<sup>6</sup> of his ship timber and goods at Marlboro', Stow, Sudbury, and Weston, with all the goods lying at his house at Sudbury. January 31, 1731/2, Samuel<sup>6</sup> administered the estate of their brother, Ebenezer,<sup>6</sup> then styled "Captain Ebenezer," whilom of Boston, where his will was drawn May 11, 1719. In that he styled himself as a mariner; mentioned his wife, Sarah, to whom he bequeathed one full half of his estate, the other to his son, Samuel,<sup>7</sup> and other children. The heirs' receipt of this brother were Ezra, James, Thomas, Hannah, Mary Greaves, and Peter King, alias Rice, in behalf of his wife, Mrs. Elizabeth (Greaves) King.

In 1731 James<sup>6</sup> Greaves, blacksmith, of Sudbury, gave a quitclaim deed to Peter King, of land given Charles Adams by his father. In 1737 he gave a deed of a lot of land to David Baldwin. January 8, 1740, he sold to Amos Sanderson twenty acres of land in the east part of Sudbury, with eight acres bounded in part by land belonging to his brother, Samuel,<sup>6</sup> and by that of his other brothers, Ezra<sup>6</sup> and Thomas.<sup>6</sup>

In February, 1744, John Fisher of Needham, Massachusetts, was appointed a guardian to Elizabeth and Samuel, minor children of James Greaves of Sudbury, to receive in their behalf what of estate accrues to them in the right of Edward Smith of Needham, late deceased. September 17, 1750, James Greaves of Sudbury and Samuel Trayn of Weston were appointed as guardians to the said Elizabeth and Samuel, in place of John Fisher, who resigned his trust. In 1759 and 1760 James<sup>6</sup> Greaves, with his wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Greaves, sold land to John Noyes, junior. March 15, 1762, James Greaves sold land lately belonging to Lieutenant Samuel<sup>6</sup> Greaves which had been a grant from the proprietors of Sudbury. This marks the time of one of the latest deeds given by James<sup>6</sup> and his wife, Elizabeth.

James<sup>6</sup> Greaves married Elizabeth, daughter of Joshua and Elizabeth (Wadkins) Smith. She was born at Needham, Massachusetts, November 11, 1719.

COMING from the Norman French, the surname Caperoune has been modified into the English Capron and signifies "hood." Many families of this name survive in the northern districts of France, whence, when William the Norman started on his invasion of England, a band of these same Caperounes embarked with his hordes, who, in the battle of Hastings in 1066, were distinguished from the other soldiers by the hoods which were attached to their coats and served to separate them from the barbarians in their midst.

After the victory they received large grants of land thereabouts and there established themselves, remaining for several generations. At some indefinite period after this, families bearing this surname crossed the Atlantic, and one of the earliest records of it is on a tombstone found in a deserted graveyard at Erie, Pennsylvania, which stone is still standing in a more or less perfect condition, the name being distinct. There is a saying that a family of this cognomen came with the French when they built Fort Duquesne and worked with them, but the descendants have passed from the memory of man.

The first of this name was Banfield<sup>1</sup> Capron. From an immediate descendant comes the tradition that, when he was a mere lad of about fourteen, still attending school, with three of his chums he secretly planned a start for the distant shores of New England, where they could become rich. As soon as they found a vessel about to sail for New England, "the night before she was to sail they smuggled themselves aboard with what scanty provisions they could garner" and hid until the ship was well under way. Another story was that he came as a cabin boy. The town whence these adventurous lads started has never been identified, but, as it was known to have been in the northern part of England, very near the boundaries of Wales, the suggestion is that Chester must have been the most feasible port.

Where they were landed or where Banfield<sup>1</sup> Capron passed the earliest years here, he did not report, his earliest known residence being in that part of Swansea, Bristol County, Massachusetts, which was, later, incorporated as Barrington, a town lying on the Rhode Island border. Not long after his settlement there, the family of John Callender, with whom he had been on intimate terms at home, came to Attleboro', Bristol County, Massachusetts. "They were a very respectable family, in affluent circumstances," with whom he renewed his acquaintance and speedily married one of the daughters, Elizabeth. In his middle life he is described as "a man of medium stature, well built, with blue eyes and a light complexion, evidently wholly English in his personal appearance."

As his children increased in number and the craving for more land grew stronger with him, he sold the farm which he is said to have owned for more than twenty years in Barrington so that he could "move back unto the woods, where he could obtain a much greater number of acres," and settled in what is now the busy, thriving town of Attleboro', Bristol County, Massachusetts.

When and where his first wife, Elizabeth (Callender) Capron, died, he did not record. He married (2) at Attleboro', Elizabeth, daughter of Pentecost Blackington from Marblehead, Massachusetts. She died May 10, 1735. He

PENTECOST<sup>1</sup> BLACKINGTON married at Marblehead, Essex County, Massachusetts, January 30, 1688/9, Ann Barrett. He was admitted a member of the First Church at Marblehead, April 2, 1699. As only members of the church could have their children baptized, it follows, as their children were all baptized as "of Ann Blackington," that the wife became a member some ten years before her husband. He owned a house, barn, and orchard on Seven Mile River in 1700; was at Marblehead until about 1707/8, where (his first wife being dead) he married (2) January 1, 1701/2, Mary (also called Mercy), widow of Peter Fickett (also written Figgett, etc.). She was Mary Bonfield when she married (1), December 9, 1681, Peter Fickett, and had a daughter, Rebecca Fickett, born October 31, 1693. This surname of Fickett was early found at Scarboro', Maine, where Christopher and John Fickett were settled before 1676.

As Pentecost<sup>1</sup> Blackington was an unmarried man when he first came to Marblehead, it is to be assumed that he was a young man who was led to the seacoast town by the fisheries and the trade in lumber, and so was in communication with that other town of Maine where the Ficketts had ventured.

October, 1714, Pentecost<sup>1</sup> Blackington and wife, Mercy, widow of Peter Fickett of Attleboro', Massachusetts, sold a tract of land at Marblehead. His will was drawn at Attleboro', September 23, 1715, and he died that year. As Mary, she died in Attleboro', May 14, 1738.

THEY HAD CHILDREN,

- I. ELIZABETH<sup>2</sup> BLACKINGTON, baptized December 15, 1689,
- II. BENJAMIN<sup>2</sup> BLACKINGTON, baptized April 25, 1692; with his wife Dorcas, both of Attleboro', they gave a quitclaim for estate in Marblehead that was the dower right of his deceased mother, Mrs. Ann Blackington,
- III. PENTECOST<sup>2</sup> BLACKINGTON, baptized January 28, 1693,
- IV. MIRIAM<sup>2</sup> BLACKINGTON, baptized March 22, 1695,
- V. MARY<sup>2</sup> BLACKINGTON, baptized December 25, 1698, married Ebenezer Doggett,
